Marked by a humble lighthouse, this mesmerising reef is home to two stunning dive sites. These are suitable only for experienced divers due to the fluctuating currents.

The dives take place on different sides of the reef, both taking approximately one hour. The first takes you straight down the drop-off on the southern side of the reef to a plateau 30m below. Here, there is an abundance of soft coral and protruding coral heads. The Nephtheidae soft corals are particularly noticeable with their rubbery, flame-red branches topped with small tentacles. Impressive schools of barracuda can often be seen lingering close to the drop-off here, working against the current to hold themselves in place. This current also makes this area great for drift diving along the cliff wall, allowing you to admire the abundance of wildlife attracted to the reef as you float by.

The second site is on the southwest side and is all about exploring the crevices and caves cut into the side of the reef. The best time to dive here is mid-afternoon, when the sunlight overhead pours into these grottos, revealing sections of beautiful coral and strips of sea whip floating in the current.
