Al Saqah Island is a popular destination for nature enthusiasts, particularly those interested in birdwatching, as the island is home to a variety of seabirds, including terns, gulls and cormorants. But the island is also surrounded by coral reefs, which makes it a popular spot for diving and snorkelling, and one of the most appealing in the Red Sea.

The island's vertical walls act as a steep drop off point to the underwater paradise below, and advanced and technical divers will enjoy challenging themselves in exploring some of the island's deeper crevices.

Extending well past 30m, the walls are accentuated by dazzling columns of hard and soft corals and submerged terraces fringed with breathtaking arrays of pinks, purples and reds. The marine life at Al Saqah Island is equally impressive, and divers can expect to see nesting green turtles, groupers, jackfish and giant moray eels peeping out of the reef's shallows.

The two dive spots on this island are suitable for advanced and technical divers comfortable with 25-35m depths. However, the mild current (or none whatsoever, at one site) and good visibility (extending to 20m in some places) present ideal conditions for beginners and thos
